

Praedicat launches first named peril casualty product from Lloyd's Lab

13th November, 2019, Los Angeles, CA. Praedicat, Inc., the leading-edge liability risk analytics software company, today announced a plan to develop a revolutionary new insurance product designed to help global industrials secure coverage for innovative and essential products and chemicals that are typically excluded or under-insured in standard coverage. It is the first casualty insurance product to be developed in the Lloyd's Lab, the insurance technology accelerator established by Lloyd's, the world's (re)insurance market.

The new insurance product has been designed with input from brokers and managing agents in the Lloyd's market who provided mentoring over the course of a ten-week programme in the Lloyd's Lab. The insurance product is dubbed 100-100-100 or "Hundreds" and will offer a $100 million limit excess of $100 million attachment point on a named peril basis covering 100 of Praedicat's profiled Litagion® agents for both General Liability and D&O. The coverage can include innovative new technologies regarded as "emerging risks," such as 5G or nanotechnology, as well as essential chemicals in manufacturing and agriculture.

"The Hundreds is innovative at many levels," according to Matthew Fredette, the VP of Named Peril Products for Praedicat. "It covers risk on a named peril basis, which creates a transparent data flow from the customer's coverage gaps all the way through to the reinsurance market. It also can be priced, and the risk can be managed, based on the underlying science that can drive the liability. This gives comfort to underwriters while also providing incentives to their customers to design safer products."

Another innovation in the design is coverage for both general liability and D&O around the same liability incidents, which is a common coverage gap and a challenge to global industrial risk managers. Praedicat facilitates this by providing underwriters with data that allows them to assess their exposures, control aggregation risks and therefore grow profitably.

Trevor Maynard, Lloyd's Head of Innovation, said: "Accumulations of liability risk have the potential to send shockwaves through the insurance industry and are one of the most complex exposure management challenges faced by insurers. It is therefore enormously encouraging to see Praedicat working with Lloyd's underwriters in the Lab to tackle these problems, demonstrating what is possible when we successfully bring together talent, ideas and technology."

Lauren Restell, Praedicat's Liaison to the Lloyd's Lab and VP of Rating and Regulatory, said "Praedicat offers analytics that facilitate the structuring of new and innovative coverages which benefits greatly from Lloyd's appetite for innovation. This product is also designed to complement the data flows planned for the Future of Lloyd's, a future that Praedicat is excited to participate in."

Robert Reville, CEO, Praedicat, said: "The Lloyd's market has been the home to some of the world's most challenging risks to insure. We are delighted to work with the Lloyd's Lab and to use the opportunity to design a new coverage that is consistent with Lloyd's historic role in the market."
